

Mayor for the Day

by Evelyn Kuniyoshi

Oh no, I am late again! Yesterday I had such a busy day. I was chosen to be the mayor for the day. Let me tell you all about it.

I was at the park playing on monkey bars. Then my mom said come here you got a phone call from the mayor. The mayor said "You have been chosen to be mayor for the day and lead the kindness police. Please come to city hall immediately."

I let go of the monkey bars and ran as fast as I could to city hall. As the leader for the kindness police I decided today would be teachers and kids appreciation day. All teachers and kids would get the day off.

Next, I went to the park to see how everyone was enjoying their day off. I saw a kid being mean to another kid. That is not kindness. I talked to the mean kid about how to be nice because it is good to be kind. The mean kid said sorry and started to play nicely with the other children.

Then I ran back to city hall because for teacher appreciation day I was throwing a party for all my teachers. For the food I ordered pizza, nachos, and hot dogs. For drinks I got soda, punch, water, and a make your own boba bar. For desert chocolate cake and ice cream.

Everything was going smoothly until I realized that I was running out of time. The guests will be arriving soon and I still have not set up the boba bar. Guess who came to help me out... the mean kid from the park, my new friend Bobbie. Bobbie picked up the cups, ice, straws, and the boba toppings. Then I was able to set up the tea dispensers and an Icee machine.

The party was amazing! We ran out of tea very quickly. The teachers and kids loved the boba bar. Bobbie had a great time and she made new friends.

I enjoyed my time as mayor, but I was very tired at the end of the day. When I got home, I fell asleep very quickly.

When I woke up in the morning I heard the phone ringing. It was the mayor. "You did a great job being mayor for the day, how would you like to be mayor for the rest of the week?" "Of course I would love to. Thank you, mayor." Here we go... this is going to be a week filled with fun and kindness.

The End!
