

What Would You Do if You Were Mayor for a Week?

By Kadin Nguyen

If I am going to be the mayor of a city for a week there are three things I would like to change. First, I want to make playgrounds more fun for kids. Second, I want to help take part in fighting climate change. Third, I want to change the field's environment at the park.

The first thing I want to do is to improve the playgrounds. Kids deserve good playgrounds. I am talking about huge playgrounds. The playground should have swings and giant slides. There also should be a giant obstacle course. I want to add that stuff to attract more kids to the playground because there aren't many kids playing outdoors nowadays.

Secondly, I want to help fight climate change. In order to do that there must be more trees. At most schools the fields are mostly empty, so I want to add more trees there. The result of that would be good. There would be more oxygen, and it would be a step in ending climate change. It would be a step in securing the future for our kids too.

Lastly as mayor I would like to change the park some more. In the park where I live, at Gridley Park, most of the field is just grass. So, I want to plant lots of trees there. It would provide shade and lots of oxygen. Also, there could be tree houses with swings!

Those are what I would do if I was a mayor for a week. The park would have more people. There would be a step in ending climate change. There would be more oxygen to breathe.
